Preparing for a Personal Injury Case: What You Need to Know (Quick Prep) Timothy W. Monsees
Preparing for a Personal Injury Case is a great resource for personal injury victims, familiarizing readers with the general process and providing answers to commonly asked questions. Written by a personal injury attorney with more than thirty years of trial experience in this area, who has also handled cases in more than twenty-five states, this book summarizes the important considerations for personal injury victims. As an attorney who has worked both for, and now against, insurance companies and big corporations, the author poses and answers the questions you should ask before becoming a party to personal injury litigation. What should you do in the first moment following an accident? How do you find and choose an attorney? What steps are involved in the litigation process? What are your duties as your case is litigated? How will your case be evaluated for settlement? The entire litigation experience is explained in terms a non-lawyer can understand. From how the overall system works to how a trial or settlement will play out, this guide addresses key topics in step-by-step detail to help you effectively prepare for the case.
