More than 10 years ago, with funding from the Connecticut State Department of Education and the encouragement of its consultant on early childhood special education, Virginia Volk, we began our studies of families of infants who were hospitalized on the newborn intensive care unit of the John Dempsey Hospital located at the University of Connecticut Health Center. BettyJo McGrade, Deborah Allen, and Maria McQueeney played pivotal roles in the early years of this research program. Additional funding from the National March of Dimes Foundation, the University of Connecticut Research Foundation, and the National Institute of Mental Health prepared the ground for the study we describe in this book. The study began in 1984 through a National Institute of Disability and Rehabilitation Research center grant to the University of Connecticut Pediatric Research and Training Center, directed by Robert Greenstein and then by Mary Beth Bruder. Linda Walker coordinated the project and conducted the interviews with families before hospital discharge. Pamela Higgins conducted all follow-up interviews and assisted with data management and analysis. Elizabeth Trueb Roscher provided support services to a portion of the families who were studied. Deborah Begin transcribed interviews and handled the administrative details of the project. Richard Mendola was the consultant on data analysis and the selection of computer software and hardware.
